

Futures in rural health

Join us to make a real difference to rural health in Australia.

James Cook University offers a diverse range of professional health programs including occupational therapy, nursing, physiotherapy, medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, speech pathology, medical laboratory science, and clinical exercise physiology.

Students undertake clinical placements in locations across Queensland, Australia and overseas, with particular emphasis given to rural, remote, tropical and Indigenous health issues.

In addition, the Faculty's excellent research profile in biomedical and molecular sciences ensures programs incorporate the most recent advances in theory.

For more information visit www.jcu.edu.au/fmhms.

"I gained so much experience from clinical placements in Mackay, Thursday Island, Townsville, Brisbane and Wacol.

Now I'm fulfilling my ambition to study renal disease in Aboriginal children."

Sean Taylor
Bachelor of Nursing Science